RESEARCH PROJECTS

Current Projects:

- Book project Mobility, Control, and the Production of Space in Ecuador (2024).

The book examines and answers this question: What are the dynamics at work in the production of Ecuador as a global space of undocumented migratory transits toward the U.S.? Based on historical and ethnographic research focused on the lived and digital everyday struggles of Caribbean, Middle Eastern, and African migrants, as well as Ecuadorean deportees – all undocumented migrants in transit from Ecuador to the United States – this book analyses the past and present of the production of Ecuador as a global space of transit and platform for illegalized migration arising from the unsolved tensions between human mobility and the politics of control. It also zooms in into the so-called “post-neoliberal” period of Ecuador’s “Citizen’s Revolution” government (2007-2017), when the country adopted an utterly progressive constitution in migration matters. However, as the book demonstrates in the country of alleged “universal citizenship,” the unsolved historical tension between mobility and control is far from being solved, and the effects of the U.S. externalized control regime southwards are paradoxically present reinforcing Ecuador’s condition as a global space of transit and migrant smuggling. The first part of the book explores the colonial and postcolonial legacies laying beneath the shaping of Ecuador as a global space of transit. The second builds upon 20 migratory trajectories, of 16 migrants from Syria, Iraq, Nigeria, Sudan, Zimbabwe, Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic, and of 4 undocumented Ecuadorean migrants deported from the U.S., who are the core interlocutors of the book. By exploring their everyday urban struggles, this second part analysis why and how those 20 characters decided to take-off to the U.S. and the role that physical, digital and social (including migrant smuggling) infrastructure play in their mobilities despite reinforced policies of control. The book contributes with an analysis of an understudied case of a global space of transit in the Americas.

- Mobilities, Control and Spatial Struggles across the Americas in a (post) pandemic context

Based upon the findings of the digital transnational trilingual project \(Im\)mobility in the Americas and COVID-19, which compares the dynamics of mobility and control across 19 countries (Canada, the United States, Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, Panama, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Cuba, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Bolivia and Brazil) her research will deepen how the pandemic has brought 1) spatial and temporal interconnections between northbound and southbound migratory corridors across the Americas; 2) the aftermaths of the devastation of migrants' living conditions and the exacerbation of undocumented transits through both corridors; 3) regional socioeconomic and political pressure that these transits place on societies and States along both migratory corridors; 4) new ways in which the U.S. externalizes its borders across the Americas; 5) reinforcement of the heterogeneous Latin American migratory control regime and its damaging effects on the migrant population; and 6) forms of migrant resistance and survival during crossing and waiting times in a highly hostile, racist and xenophobic environment.

Online Research Multimedia Projects

2020 (Im)Mobility in the Americas and COVID-19 (www.inmovilidadesamericas.org)

I am the funder and co-coordinator of this trilingual digital hemispheric initiative. Following the shutdown of borders across the Americas, more than 45 researchers – from diverse disciplinary social sciences and humanities backgrounds and affiliated to various universities and research centers from North, Central and South America and the Caribbean–, organized virtually to gather mainly press information about the particular situations of millions of regional and extracontinental undocumented migrants and asylum seekers currently residing in or transiting across the continent. Based on the collected data, the research team created an online digital repository which resulted in the online web archive: (Im)mobility in the Americas and COVID-19 (www.inmovilidadesamericas.org). As of July 2021, the web-page is tilingual (English/Spanish/Portuguese) and gives an account of the situation in the following 19 countries: Canada, the United States, Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, Panama, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Cuba, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Bolivia and Brazil.

Together with Dr. Ulla Berg, Associate Professor of Latino & Caribbean Studies and Anthropology, Rutgers University, we have been granted a $10,800 fund from Rutgers Global (2020-2021) to develop the project's virtual platform and virtual teaching modules to be taught in Spring 2021.

2020 Ethnographic Mosaic of Migrant Children Across the Americas Children On The Move An Ethnographic Mosaic of the Americas.

I was the co-coordinator of this bilingual digital humanities project which won a grant from the National Geographic Society's Committee for Research and Exploration. It was created by Colectiva Infancia, an international research network specialized in analysing the dynamics at work in present day children migration through the extended migratory corridor Andean Region-Central America-Mexico-U.S. I am member of Colectiva Infancias. Based on ethnographic research in Ecuador, I developed the following sections: "Los que se quedan" y "Las Cuidadoras". Voces, Memorias e Imágenes de la Niñez y Adolescencia migrante y sus cuidadoras en la dinámica migratoria Ecuador- Estados Unidos, "Los que se quedan" and "Las Cuidadoras". Voices, Memories and Images of Migrant Children and Adolescents and their Caregivers in the Ecuador-United States Migratory Dynamics.
